

Editor's Comment

Arthroscopic Arthropathy: Iatrogenic Arthroscopic Joint Lesions in Animals

Although there is nothing very new in these iatrogenically produced lesions of the articular cartilage in a dog, the following article does serve a purpose in that it brings to the attention of arthroscopists that they should make every effort to avoid damaging the joint surfaces in human patients. Unfortunately, neither this paper nor similar papers produced in some of the world's large academic centers gives us much knowledge of the long-term results of lesions of the articular cartilage, produced by whatever means.

S. Ward Casscells
Editor-in-Chief